PGA Learning Center is selected as one of the Top 100 Golf Ranges

The PGA Learning Center was one of 25 facilities named in the Southeast sector of the country by Golf Range Magazine.

01.10.2006 05:24 pm (EST)

The PGA Learning Center located at PGA Village in Port St. Lucie, Fla., garnered a fourth consecutive selection among the Top 100 Golf Ranges in America for 2005. The list of honorees, which also includes five Canadian facilities, was selected by Golf Range Magazine, the trade publication of the Golf Range Association of America (GRAA).

The 35-acre PGA Learning Center, which opened in 2000, was one of 25 facilities named in the Southeast sector of the country. The state-of-the-art golf park located at PGA Village in Port St. Lucie, has been an annual selection in the Top 100 listing since 2001.

Founded in 1992, Golf Range Magazine is distributed to 12,000 owners, operators, general managers and teaching pros of golf ranges (e.g., golf learning centers, academies, indoor and domes) as well as short courses (Executive, 9-hole, and Par-3).

"We are proud to announce this year's group of golf facilities that have distinguished themselves with a commitment to teaching and training, excellence in operations and solid community outreach programs," said Mark Silverman, editor of Golf Range Magazine. These facilities and their owner/operators play an important role in grassroots golf development, retail golf club and equipment sales and offering family recreational programs."

This year's Top 100 list and additional information are available in the November/December issue of Golf Range Magazine and through a 16-page PDF file on the GRAA's Web site at www.GolfRange.org. Awards will be presented at the 13th Annual GRAA Golf Range and Short Course Conference and Reception to be held Wednesday, Jan. 25, 2006, at the 53rd PGA Merchandise Show & Convention in Orlando, Fla.
